Subject: Top Ten Legal Tips

Interlochen and Kingsley – Elder law developed as lifespans increased, expanding the traditional trust and estates law practice. Not only does an elder law practice handle important estate and financial planning, it also takes care of issues related to health care, long term care planning, guardianship, Social Security and Medicare/Medicaid. Most elder attorneys deal with a wide range of legal matters that are focused on the needs of older adults and are often more equipped to manage their sensitive emotional and physical requirements.

If you have put off writing a will or trust, haven't updated the estate plan you made years ago or are interested in hearing the latest legal updates that affect seniors, you will want to attend the presentation of Greg Kish, Certified Elder Law Attorney, on Thursday, July 27, in Interlochen, 9700 Riley Road. He will also give his presentation on Wednesday, August 2, in Kingsley, 115 E. Blair Street. Both sessions will start at 12:30 p.m.

Kish can help identify whether your current will, power of attorney or other legal documents meet current needs. He also will provide updates about recent changes in the law regarding real estate tax exemptions, Veterans Administration benefits, funeral planning, Medicaid for long-term care, medical decision making or planning for family members with special needs.

The presentations are free, but advance registration is appreciated.
